The beautiful history of a moving dream.

Antonio's son, Giovanni Roncato founded the Valigeria Roncato company.

40's

The history of the Roncato family began in the 1940s, just after WWII, when Antonio Roncato and his wife Palmira began, amidst many difficulties, to make bags and suitcases for Italian emigrants who, at that time, undertook the journey of their lifetime.

A journey based on the hope of arriving in a better place than the one they left behind, the "promised land" of the 19th century, the dream.

Antonio Roncato, who worked during the war as a production manager in a suitcase company, has been able to learn the profession firsthand even risking his life because of bombings that destroyed bridges and way connections. So, after hiding for a few months to escape the dangers of war, young Antonio decided to found, together with his wife, the family business, producing the only items he could do very well, bags and suitcases.

The wheels removal system and expandability together offer over 25% additional internal capacity.

The company pays special attention to its collaborators:

“We firmly believe in the value of each person and encourage the development of independent thought in achieving business goals. I like to remember that I am surrounded by people who have been working with me for over 40 years,” commented Gianni Roncato.

Every new challenge is faced with the utmost commitment by everyone in order to achieve excellence and offer quality products that meet ever-changing market needs.

“And the dream continues through my children Alessandra, Andrea, Cristiano and Enrico. They are our third generation and, over the years, I have tried to hand down to them all the passion, strength and experience that my father handed down to me, all the values required to retain the craftsmanship and attention to details that have set us apart from the start of this exciting journey.”
